Director’s Corner

Robert Jester,
OYA Director

We all recognize the importance of creating the most effective service delivery system in juvenile justice. By bringing together diverse groups representing stakeholders statewide, we strive to achieve inclusiveness in our planning and provision of services. I want to provide an update on some of our partnering activities.

Advisory Committees: OYA, in collaboration with our advisory committees, is developing work plans that ensure all Oregonians are represented in what we do, and include the voices of cultural responsiveness and gender equity. Through the African American, Native American, Hispanic, Young Women’s, and OYA Advisory Committees, we forge forward.

Services to young women: Two years ago, a work group from the OYA Advisory Committee developed an ambitious plan to improve services for female offenders in OYA’s custody. I am very pleased that the legislature recognized the value of that work and provided funding to improve services for this significant population, which included the reopening of the Oak Creek Youth Correctional Facility in Albany as a female-only facility. I am grateful for the participation of so many partners in developing and supporting these recommendations, and for their continued advice as we develop the programs and services for young women. These programs include improving transition services at Corvallis House and expanding community placements.

Resources: The 2007 legislature increased juvenile justice resources provided to OYA and the county systems. This includes an additional 73 community placements, which will be phased in over our two-year budget period. We are developing a process to include county juvenile departments, service providers, and other partners to ensure we are using data and experience to identify the most pressing needs in juvenile justice. We are also working with our public safety partners to identify the types of treatment services needed in the additional close custody resources the legislature approved.

Wraparound: Earlier this year, Governor Kulongoski issued an Executive Order directing state agencies and others to develop a plan to implement a Wraparound model in Oregon. The model uses an intensive, multi-disciplinary process to meet the needs and address the risks in young people with significant mental health issues. The OYA has been participating in a pilot project in Multnomah County and has been involved in the Governor’s process as well. A report to the Governor will be issued in the near future, which I think will provide significant opportunities for improving partnerships, emphasizing prevention as an integral part of juvenile justice, and diverting at-risk youth from the juvenile justice system. I’m sure we will be doing more with Wraparound in the months and years to come.

February ‘08
Supplemental Session
Planning Started

While the 74th Legislative session is complete, members will continue working hard over the next few months. For the first time, the Legislature will reconvene in February 2008 for a supplemental session. House and Senate Members will serve on interim committees, which will consider a broad range of issues and draft legislation, so the Legislature can hit the ground running in February. Governor Kulongoski and state agencies will not introduce bills, instead moving concepts through the House and Senate interim committees.

When originally conceived, this even-year legislative session was seen as a budget-tweaking opportunity. State tax revenues are holding steady, so there isn’t significant additional revenue to spend. The Emergency Board, which normally handles budget matters in the interim, will be on hold. Instead, an interim Joint Ways and Means Committee will meet during the February session to tackle a workload comparable to two E-Board meetings.

OYA Wraps Up ‘07 Session with Summary Report

The 2007 Legislature recognized the success that OYA and our juvenile justice partners have had in achieving our public safety outcomes, and has given us additional resources to improve on our record. We will have additional opportunities, as the overall agency budget will increase by about $53 million over the 2005-07 level.

During each legislative session, OYA staff track bills and provide a summary of legislation enacted that have the most potential to impact business practice and service delivery. To find priority bills, as well as steps OYA will take to respond to legislation that occurred during the 2007 session, please click on the following link:

Human Services: The OYA is working with Bruce Goldberg and his staff at the Department of Human Services to focus on how we can improve some of the processes and areas where the work of the OYA and juvenile justice intersects with the many services provided by DHS. It has been more than a decade since OYA and DHS separated organizationally. Both Bruce and I recognize our continued relationship, and the importance of ensuring that any differences in our overlapping services, policies, and procedures are the result of decisions that have been reviewed and affirmed, and not just traditional practices that have carried on through time.

Department of Corrections: The OYA has worked closely with the Department of Corrections on improving transition services when offenders move between OYA and DOC facilities or are released to adult post-prison supervision. The recent Governor’s Executive Order that creates the Transition Council will bring partners and stakeholders together to further this work project.

I recognize that we could not have made these gains without your active support and collaboration. I want to thank you for your partnership in achieving the strong outcomes that showcase Oregon’s effective juvenile justice programs.
Oak Creek Reopening Project Update

Work continues on the reopening of the Oak Creek Youth Correctional Facility this winter as a gender-specific facility for young women. Significant renovation and remodel efforts are underway to create an environment specifically designed to serve young women. Workgroups, along with a steering committee, meet on a regular basis to guide the planning, preparation, and implementation of the facility’s opening. Here is our progress to-date:

Remodel Update:
As a result of diligent work by OYA staff, the State Procurement Office, and consultant teams, elements of the remodel project were advertised for bid on schedule. It is anticipated that bids will be opened and reviewed on October 30th. It is the State Procurement Office’s responsibility to review the bid submissions and ensure that requirements have been met. Once that process is complete, the contracts can be awarded to the lowest responsive and responsible bidder, and construction can start.

Additionally, work is being completed to place the furniture order, finalize the color schemes, and plan how additional security cameras can be installed.

Name the Living Units:
On October 9, 2007, the Steering Committee reviewed a significant number of excellent and thoughtful suggestions for living unit names submitted by OYA staff, partners, and the young women at Hillcrest. Thanks to all those who participated in this exercise!

The Steering Committee selected their top three recommendations, which the Director’s Office reviewed and agreed with. The living units will be named:
- Aspen (Symbolizes determination, overcoming fears and doubts, endurance and courage)
- Birch (Symbolizes new beginnings and cleansing of the past)
- Cedar (Symbolizes healing and protection)

These unit names connect very well with the “Oak” in Oak Creek YCF, which is known as the mightiest of trees and symbolizes strength and courage. Special thanks to Chris Duval who submitted the living unit name suggestions.

Oak Creek Superintendent
Selection for the Oak Creek Superintendent position continues, with final candidates currently being considered. This process is expected to take several more weeks.

Hiring Process Moves Forward
Management positions (Program Director, Treatment Managers (3), Security Manager and Cook Supervisor) closed October 10th. First round interviews are slated to begin November 12-16th. Flash announcements (notifications of job openings emailed to employees) for all remaining positions are expected to be posted on October 29th, 2007.

Training:
Additional New Employee Orientation and Basic Facility Trainings have been scheduled to accommodate the hiring timeframes for Oak Creek. The training will encompass gender-specific concepts and approaches, and incorporate role plays, scenarios, techniques and other considerations customized to serve the female population.

75-bed Capacity Increase:
As the Oregon Youth Authority prepares for the addition of 75 close custody beds, we are looking for input from the juvenile department directors and OYA field offices to assist us in identifying the profile types of youth that may access this additional capacity. This information, along with our current population demands and trends of youth in OYA facilities, will be reviewed to help us make determinations about the focus for additional units in the facility system. Discussions will also consider what living unit focus will be most appropriate for the three units at Hillcrest transitioning to a male population following the opening of Oak Creek. A sub group will meet October 24th, and their recommendations will be shared with groups and stakeholders for input.

Timeframe Update:
Oak Creek will be operational in January, with staff training and facility preparation. The young women are slated to begin moving to the facility February 11, 2008. This slight adjustment was made to meet the demands of the physical plant remodel and renovation.

OYA and statewide partners engaged in a two-year grant process, working toward the development of an agency-wide curriculum for the treatment of juvenile sex offenders. This work is funded by the U.S. Department of Justice's Center for Sex Offender Management (CSOM), and guided by the Center for Effective Public Policy.

In July and August ‘07, a work group was convened that included 35 OYA staff members, as well as partner agencies. Dr. Keith Kaufman and two graduate assistants from Portland State University are providing the direction, literature review, and support for the project. Subcommittees identified core modules and have begun the development phase. Core models include:

- Healthy Sexuality
- Attitudes and Beliefs about Sex and Sexuality
- Sexual History Disclosure
- Behavioral, Cognitive and Emotional Modulation Skill
- Patterns of Offending Behavior
- Victim Awareness
- Taking Ownership
- Family Treatment
- Clarification
- Transition
- Re-entry for the transition facilities

The implementation phase will include staff training and test pilot sites at MacLaren and Tillamook Youth Correctional Facilities. Once this initial test is completed and curriculum adjustments have been made, phase-in will begin at all other OYA facilities delivering sex offender treatment to youth.

Staff training will be developed under the guidance of Gary Lasater from the Training Academy. OYA Information Systems will develop an efficient method of documentation and evaluation. Focus will include assessments and evaluations to guide placements and treatments over time. This is a comprehensive and exciting project. Thank you to all who have contributed.

The Juvenile Rights Project (JRP), Oregon Youth Authority (OYA), and the Multnomah Circuit court are committed to a collaborative effort to ensure that youth offenders re-entering the community after a period of time in a close custody facility are able to access all services, particularly educational services. Studies have demonstrated that successful involvement in education at re-entry will substantially reduce the likelihood of recidivism.

Honorable Dale R. Koch, OYA Director Robert Jester, and JRP’s Janet Merrell have renewed a Memorandum of Understanding effective through September 2008 that outlines the roles and responsibilities in carrying out the JRP’s SchoolWorks Re-Entry Program.

SchoolWorks provide services to youth exiting close custody facilities intended to ease their return to community-based school placements. Staff work to reduce barriers including lack of credits, school mobility, developmental disabilities, environmental risk factors, and social perceptions that may stand in the way of a youth’s success in school.

This Memorandum of Understanding further strengthens the goals of the project through the coordination of agency resources, staffing, and problem solving. In addition, it is said to be the beginning process of becoming a Juvenile Delinquency Court of Excellence, in accordance with guidelines established by the National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges.

Congratulations on your vision and to continued success!

The Department of Administrative Services’ Office of Economic Analysis released the Oregon Youth Authority’s Demand Forecast on October 9, 2007. This forecast covers youths committed to OYA who are in close custody or out of home community placement.

Close custody demand is going up. The new forecast shows slight, but continuing, increases in close custody demand throughout the 10-year forecast period. At the end of this biennium, OYA will be funded at 995 close custody beds, while the new forecast shows demand at 1,269 (up 99 from the April forecast).

Community placement demand is going up. It shows the same trend as close custody – slight but continuing growth. OYA is funded at 681 community placements by the end of this biennium. The new forecast shows demand at 708 as of July 09 (up 29 from the April forecast).

Annual Progress Board Report on Performance

OYA Parole Recidivism and Incidents of Youth Self-Harm on the Decline

The Oregon Youth Authority, along with all other state agencies, is required by the Oregon Progress Board (OPB) to report on agency performance each fiscal year. The OYA devotes a significant amount of time preparing a comprehensive report, over 50 pages in length, which details information on 14 specific Key Performance Measures (KPMs).

The KPMs provide valuable information on areas critical to agency success. A brief summary of the data from the fiscal year 2006-07 is provided below:

- The OYA had more escapes from close custody facilities and runaways from provider supervision than originally anticipated for this year (KPMs 1 & 2).
- Youth-to-youth injuries in the facilities showed an increase since the last fiscal year (KPM 3a).
- The field has had no staff-to-youth injuries over the past two fiscal years (KPM 3b).
- The OYA facilities showed a significant decrease in the number of youth demonstrating suicidal behavior (KPM 5a).
- The OYA fell short of its targets on the percentage of youth who received an OYA risk needs assessment within 30 days of commitment or admission (KPM 6), as well as its target for the percentage of youth who have an active case plan within 30 days of commitment (KPM 7).
- Approximately 81% of youth eligible for an Individual Education Plan in this fiscal year received these services.
- The number of youth receiving community re-entry services and youth engagement in school and work (KPMs 9 and 10 a & b) were slightly down from last fiscal year.
- There was an increase in the percentage of restitution paid compared with fiscal year 2006 (KPM 11).
- Parole recidivism rates (KPM 12) have decreased from last year, although probation recidivism rates (KPM 13) have shown a slight increase (from 9.6 to 9.9) for youth tracked over a 12-month period.

News From Juvenile Justice Information System (JJIS)

JJIS Referral Charts & Trends Report Available

The JJIS Steering Committee is pleased to announce publication of the “Total Referrals – Charts and Trends (2006)” report. The report, prepared by the JJIS Data & Evaluation Committee and the OYA Research & Evaluation Unit, signifies another milestone accomplishment of the JJIS interagency partnership. The report provides a graphical representation of the 2006 referral data, as well as Oregon referral trends over the past 10 years. The new report is a companion to the year-end “Youth & Referrals (2006)” report published in March, 2007.

JJIS Automates CEOJJC DRAI

JJIS continues to provide automation and support for best practice initiatives within the partnership between OYA and the 36 county juvenile departments. The Central Eastern Oregon Juvenile Justice Consortium (CEOJJC) counties are participating in the national Juvenile Detention Alternatives Initiative, and have been working with JJIS to automate its new Detention Risk Assessment Instrument, known as the CEOJJC DRAI.

This new tool in JJIS will feature automated data links and scoring to assist CEOJJC counties to make informed detention admission decisions, using objective decision-making criteria consistently across the consortium. The DRAI will also assist CEOJJC in evaluating its use of detention, helping to reduce minority over-representation, targeting resources for youth most at risk of public safety or failure to appear at a hearing, and identifying the need for alternatives.

OYA Website Gets a Facelift

Check out the OYA website’s new home page!!

On August 20, the Oregon Youth Authority launched a new version of its website using the updated Oregon government agency designs. The designs primarily address compliance with American with Disabilities Act (ADA) requirements.

In the past, because of staffing and resources, the website was designed to be relatively static, with few changes and just using information from each biennium’s budget documents to describe our services and programs. However, one of the initiatives of the agency’s Communications Workgroup is to utilize the web in a much more dynamic way to keep our clients, partners, and staff informed of what’s happening at OYA.

The OYA Web Group has been meeting since May and fast-tracked the project’s original February 2008 timeline to September 2007.

What are the changes?

The most obvious change is the two new feature columns front and center on the homepage. The OYA Web Group chose to use the left side for information about OYA, its history, its “present”, and agency initiatives. The right side will be updated frequently with links to Director’s bulletins, announcements, and other current news. While the former website’s home page used only a left-side navigation system, the new design includes an additional set of navigation buttons on the upper right side. The group decided to keep this group of navigation tabs for family and youth-related information.

- A new FAQ (Frequently Asked Questions) page has been added and will eventually include various sections specific for field, facility, and general questions.
- Reports and Publications join the Newsroom information (newsletters and press releases) under Communications & Publications.
- OYA Policies have been added to the website and mirror the policies in the Outlook folders.

What’s Next?

The group will continue to meet over the coming months to refine the website information, add pictures beyond the “bricks and mortar” of the facility photos, and check in with various partner groups to determine what else would be helpful on the website. It is definitely a work in progress! Don’t forget . . . there’s a link to a survey about the site with questions about its navigability and usefulness, in addition an area for you to tell us what’s missing. Let us know what you think!
HYCF Youth Award Grants

Since its inception, Youth Guidance Association has been determined to provide quality staff and services for young people in trouble. That commitment continues to this day. YGA was established in the late 1960’s as a division of Youth for Christ when property was purchased at Welches, Oregon (the former Fred Meyer summer estate) for a boys’ residential treatment program. Named “Son Village”, the first two boys entered the program in 1969.

As the treatment needs of the clients increased in severity, it became necessary to provide 24-hour supervision for all the residents, and to move away from the original house-parent model. In 1991, programs adjusted to round-the-clock staffing, with awake-night coverage to ensure the safety of every resident.

In 1999, YGA programs were intensified and strengthened when Behavioral Rehabilitation Services were implemented. Meeting the high BRS standards allowed YGA to provide an advanced level of services to clients and their families.

Building Confidence and Teamwork

Youth Guidance does a fund-raising campaign every year to provide the youth in its programs the opportunity to have a camping experience during the summer. The staff involved all agree that it is “definitely worth all the time and effort” put into making it happen. Boys from Charis Ridge went out this summer with “On the Edge Adventures” (OTEA), which provides wilderness experiences designed to build self-confidence, teamwork and leadership.

Shirley Heck, YGA’s Program Administrator, recently spoke with several of the youth who participated this summer, and was once again impressed with the impact that this kind of experience can have. The theme of building self-confidence came through over and over again.

Hillcrest & Community Collaboration
Bring New Resources

Community 101 is a service learning class taught at Robert Farrell School (RFS) on the Hillcrest YCF campus. The class represents collaboration among the Oregon Department of Education, Willamette Education Service District, and Portland General Electric (PGE), in support of high school students in Oregon. RFS was fortunate to become a part of this program during 2007.

Youth in the Community 101 class research non-profit organizations, create requests for proposals, solicit grant requests, review the submissions, and award the grants over the class term. Essentially, the youth at RFS function as a foundation board. On August 21st, they awarded funds totaling $5,000 to five non-profit agencies dealing with community needs in the areas of violence prevention, health care, and education. The funds were made available by PGE. The next quarter of class activities are beginning October 1st, and we have received another commitment of $5,000 from PGE.

Community 101’s effort is resulting in many positive outcomes. RFS students are developing important skills including teamwork, conducting community needs assessments, doing research, interviewing community agency representatives, leveraging funds, writing grants, understanding the work of foundations, and participating in service learning. Students are also developing empathy. They are getting to know first-hand the needs of many people in our community and the limited funds available to take care of them. They are responding to these needs and actively helping others, even while still incarcerated. In their words, “We are experiencing healing, forgiveness, and are giving back to the communities and families we have once taken so much from.”

OYA Directions October 2007
Oregon will participate in an emergency exercise, TOPOFF4

“Top Officials 4” is the nation’s fourth major exercise in emergency preparedness. Using resources that Congress made available to prepare for acts of terrorism, the U.S. Department of Homeland Security sponsors the TOPOFF exercises as part of a thorough assessment of America’s ability to prevent, prepare for, respond to and recover from an attack that involves a weapon of mass destruction.

During the week of October 15-19, Oregon’s state and local governments will participate with the federal government in a national emergency exercise in Portland, Oregon. You may hear news reports of bombs exploding or of poisonous clouds in our region. This is all part of an exercise to test Oregon’s ability to respond to an emergency and protect and care for its citizens. This “Top Officials” exercise is conducted every two years by the federal government. This year, the exercise involves detonation of simulated “dirty bombs” in Portland, Arizona and the island of Guam.
