How do I become an arbiter physician?

Contact the Resolution Section at 503-947-7816 or the medical arbiter coordinator at 503-947-7763. The department will send you a Medical Arbiter Statement of Interest form. This is a non-contractual document and is the only form you need to sign in order to enroll.

Once the department verifies that you are licensed and in good standing with the Oregon Medical Board, we will add you to the Active List of Medical Arbiters. An Appellate Service Team member will contact you to arrange training and schedule your first examination. Arbiter physicians are free to decline arbiter referrals or withdraw from the program at any time.

What is the Medical Arbiter Program?

The Medical Arbiter Program is administered by the Oregon Workers’ Compensation Division, which is part of the Oregon Department of Consumer and Business Services. The Medical Arbiter Program consists of a network of more than 300 physicians who perform impartial examinations of injured workers. These evaluations, known as medical arbiter examinations, are designed to assist the department in resolving disagreements over the impairment findings used at claim closure. With its distinctive focus on impairment findings, the medical arbiter examination does not address compensability, treatment options, or other issues typically discussed in an independent medical examination report.

What is the role of the arbiter physician?

As the title implies, the medical arbiter must maintain a role of impartiality, neither serving as an advocate for the injured worker, nor promoting the interests of the insurer. A definitive assessment of impairment findings is established through the arbiter’s written report that generally forms the basis for the department to determine a final rating of permanent disability.

Physicians not only appreciate the neutrality associated with arbiter evaluations but many consider it a meaningful avenue of public service. Many physicians in semi-retirement have also entered the Medical Arbiter Program as an opportunity to keep active in the medical profession.

How are arbiter fees established?

The Resolution Section of the Workers’ Compensation Division determines and pre-authorizes fees based on three components: (1) the complexity of the examination and the number of body areas to be evaluated; (2) the extent of the medical record to be reviewed; and (3) preparation of the arbiter report. Each component is assigned to one of three levels of difficulty. By law, the insurer is required to pay the arbiter’s fees.

Do arbiter physicians receive training?

Physicians new to the Medical Arbiter Program receive one-on-one training from the department before their first arbiter evaluation. In addition, participating physicians receive feedback on their arbiter reports, as well as statistical information comparing their performance with other arbiters.

The skills acquired in performing arbiter evaluations and assessing permanent impairment are invaluable for physicians who must interact as treating or consulting physicians within the workers’ compensation system.

Where are medical arbiter examinations performed?

Most participating physicians perform arbiter examinations at their own clinic or facility.

Also, some arbiter physicians obtain office space in other communities to increase the potential for additional referrals.

The department attempts to select an arbiter physician in close proximity to the injured worker to minimize travel.

What about further involvement?

Once the medical arbiter report has been prepared and sent to the parties, the physician is done unless the department finds that clarification is needed. Case law in Oregon is such that arbiter physicians are seldom, if ever, deposed or subpoenaed.

What kind of physician is the department seeking?

In creating the Medical Arbiter Program, the legislature envisioned participation from a wide spectrum of Oregon physicians, ranging from those who treat injured workers to those who perform independent medical examinations. To fulfill this objective, the department maintains an ongoing process to recruit new physicians into the program. Regardless of previous experience in the area of workers’ compensation or in performing impairment-related examinations, the department is eager to hear from all interested physicians.
